An Injury To One - Is An Injury To All!

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY UNIONISE THE FIGHT!

*International Women's Day 8 March:
An IWW International Statement 2026*

On this International Working Women's Day, we salute the countless women, femmes and gender-oppressed people everywhere who organise, fight and build solidarity in workplaces, communities and movements. This day originated in working-class struggle against exploitation and continues as a reminder that liberation is incomplete so long as capitalism, patriarchy, imperialism and state repression dominate our lives.

Around the world we face converging crises that deepen inequality and violence against women and all oppressed people.

In zones of war and occupation including Gaza and other sites of genocidal violence women bear the brunt of state terror, displacement and structural starvation, standing strong amid immense suffering.

The resurgence of autocratic and fascist movements globally reinforces systems that deny bodily autonomy, curtail basic freedoms and scapegoat marginalised communities.

We condemn imperialist aggression that wreaks havoc across continents from economic warfare and sanctions to proxy conflicts and foreign interventions. The dignity and sovereignty of nations must be respected, not undermined by external domination or corporate interests.

Working women in these regions are on the frontlines defending autonomy and community resilience against both external pressures and internal repression.

Patriarchy persists as a structural engine of oppression that intersects with racial, economic and colonial hierarchies.

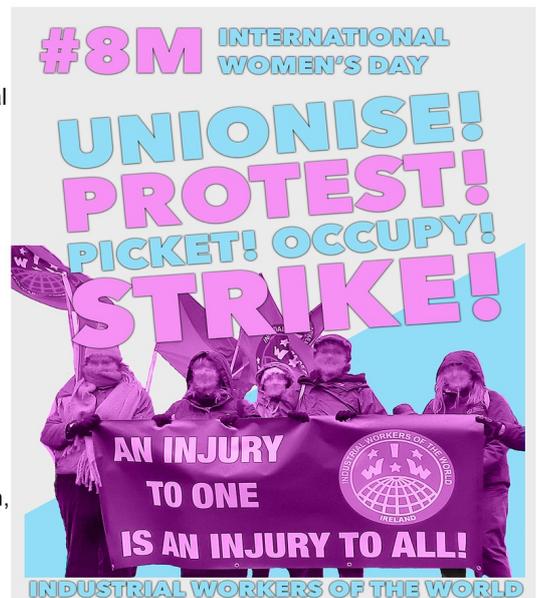

Women continue to face wage gaps, unpaid care burdens, gender-based violence and discriminatory access to healthcare and labour rights - realities reinforced by systems that commodify people and prioritise profit over wellbeing.

Capitalism thrives on exploitation, extracting surplus value from working women's labour while offloading social costs onto the most vulnerable.

We recognise that our liberation is bound up with the fight against capitalist exploitation and that gender liberation cannot be fully achieved within systems that depend on inequality and class oppression.

This 8th of March, we pledge:

- Solidarity with all exploited and oppressed women, femmes and gender-oppressed people in workplaces, health systems, universities, homes and borders.
- Resistance to imperialism, war and state violence wherever they occur.
- An end to systemic patriarchy, racism and capitalist exploitation that deny basic rights and dignity.
- Collective action for workers' power, democratic control of labour and resources, and genuine equality.

To build a world where every woman can live free from violence, poverty and discrimination, we must strengthen international working-class unity and not only celebrate but organise, agitate and build institutions of mutual aid and collective struggle.

Our liberation is a collective project rooted in worker solidarity across borders and communities.

Women to the front, not just today, but every day. #8M #IWD #IWD2026 #IWW

IWW members will be attending International Women's Day actions across the country. We hope you can take part also.

IWW TALKS IN DERRY & BELFAST: MIGRATION & WORKPLACE ORGANISING TODAY

Migrant workers in the West are often in some of the most precarious positions in the labour market.

While economies intimately depend upon our labour, we are routinely subjected to poverty wages, labour rights abuses and health&safety violations.

The recent immigration law changes proposed by the UK government will only push us deeper into insecurity, and make our lives worse while demanding more of our labour.

We know that governments, businesses and the law will not protect the dignity of migrant workers: history has consistently shown that only the power of organised workers can generate lasting improvements in labour conditions.

Across the UK, the Pan African Workers Association (PAWA) and the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW) have been mobilising with many workers in care, logistics and hospitality to build the power of the working class.

At this event key organisers from PAWA/IWW and the Black and Migrant Workers (UNISON) will discuss the organising challenges, strategies and successes they have experienced in the last few years.

They will also discuss what the new immigration proposals mean, and how we can collectively organise to improve our lives

MIGRATION & WORKPLACE ORGANISING TODAY:
A DISCUSSION ABOUT OUR RIGHTS

FRIDAY
17TH APRIL
6.30PM

as migrants.

Tapiwa Guruuswa is a founding member of the Pan African Workers Association and an equal rights campaigner. Kefilwe Selotlego is secretary of PAWA, and responsible for communications and the smooth running of the union. Idnan is a PAWA delegate and organiser.

Marley Davies is a casework coordinator for the Industrial Workers of the World in London.

Panos Theodoropoulos is an IWW member and academic whose recent book 'The Precarious Migrant Worker' explores the ways in which precarity is internalised, experienced, and resisted.

Beverly Simpson and Susan Magutakuona are trade union activists in the Black and Migrant Workers group in UNISON.

The events, which will be held in both Belfast and Derry, will conclude with Q&A and open discussion, with light food and refreshments.

The events is for everyone interested in finding out more about how workers can organise as a union to fight exploitative working conditions, and how to build resilience through mutual aid and solidarity.

Derry: Friday 17th April Belfast: Saturday 18th April

Further details will be listed on IWW Ireland website and on our social media pages.
